FARM AND TRADES SCHOOL MEMORIES — A LIVING TRADITION

THE THOMPSON ACADEMY WORK PROGRAM

In 1956, The Farm and Trades School on Thompson's Island was renamed Thompson Academy, a titular change which both formalized and reflected a process of evolution that the school had been undergoing for some fifty years. The Farm and Trades School, as its name implied, had provided a practical training program which, according to a 1947 school brochure, developed:

". . . . in each boy considerable skill in several of the departments of practical training with intensive training in one or two departments. These practical training departments included printing, sloyd, carpentry, heating engineering, painting, glazing, electrical repairs, plumbing and steam repairs, cement work, floor care, building maintenance, farming, lawn care, shrubbery, tree pruning, shoe repairing, laundry operation, clothing care, baking, vegetable canning, butchering, meat cutting, poultry dressing, office and messenger work."

Additionally, each student was required to complete a full curriculum of academic instruction. Typical school days included four hours of class work, four hours of work training, and four hours of play and recreation. Although demanding, the success of that vigorous program is yet attested to by hundreds of enthusiastic alumni.

By 1955, however, the Trustees of the School had determined that a disproportionately large number of then recent graduates had left the farm and shops on Thompson's Island only to find that their eclectic, but somewhat obsolete skills were not so easily marketable as they had been in an earlier era. At that time, the Board of Trustees elected to change the name of the school to Thompson Academy, to extend the program to include the full four years of high school, to both modify and intensify the academic curriculum, and insofar as was possible, to continue to introduce each boy to a variety of practical, manual skills.

The formula has been tremendously successful. The farm program ended in 1963 as a result of a disastrous fire which destroyed the main barn, much of the farm equipment, and some live stock. Several of the industrial arts courses — glazing, printing, vegetable canning, poultry dressing, etc. — were also terminated because of lack of training facilities and diminishing student and social interest. Yet, even as the academic curriculum became more and more geared to college preparation, Thompson Academy has continued to emphasize the importance of well-roundedness and manual skill development.

In 1973, each student is responsible for the execution of a daily work assignment. Some boys work on the school boat; others assist Chef Valerien Daigle with the preparation and service of meals; while still others are engaged in various maintenance operations that range from custodial work to machine repair. In addition to a boy's work program, there is, of course, the opportunity to take formal course work in carpentry, sloyd, and auto mechanics. In effect, a modified version of the original study-work-play concept remains very much intact, and Thompson Academy graduates of the 1970's continue to be as manually capable as they are well prepared for higher education.

THOMPSON ACADEMY'S

12th Headmaster

At the December 20, 1972 meeting of the Thompson Academy Board of Trustees, John D. Pinto of Westerly, Rhode Island was named to succeed George Wright as Headmaster of the Academy. Mr. Pinto will assume the post in June 1973 as Thompson Academy prepares to enter a new phase of development that will enable the School and the Island to increasingly, and more effectively, fulfill the educational, social, and recreational needs of a growing number of needy students from the metropolitan Boston area.

Mr. Pinto has served as the Director of Curriculum at the Academy for four of his six years of affiliation with the School. Additionally, he has served as Chairman of the Mathematics Department, Yearbook Adviser, and Dean of Students. He is a graduate of Tabor Academy, Columbia College, and the Honeywell Computer Institute, and has done additional graduate work at the University of Rhode Island and Boston University.

As the Academy's twelfth headmaster in 159 years, Mr. Pinto will succeed such outstanding men as Cornelius Conway Felton, the third headmaster of Thompson Academy, who later became President of Harvard College; Robert Morrison, who after retiring as the school's fourth headmaster, was elected to three terms as Mayor of Portsmouth, New Hampshire; and Houghton Pearl, headmaster from 1955-67, and a former Commissioner of Secondary Education in Vermont, who is currently Headmaster of the Burr and Burton Seminary in Manchester, Vermont.

ROBERT ROANE KITCHING

1883-1972

Mr. Robert Kitching, as generations of Thompson Academy old boys will remember, lived each day of his eighty-nine years joyfully, compassionately, and, above all, productively. He arrived at the Academy in September, 1928, and, until the very day of his death on November 7, 1972, he served it well.

Mr. Kitching was the poultryman for the school farm until 1963, maintaining a flock of Rhode Island Red chickens which provided eggs and poultry for the entire school during a span of thirty-five years. His incubators hatched nearly 2,000 chicks each spring, the surplus of which was sold to help raise funds for The Farm and Trades School. The poultry department was disbanded after the termination of the farm program, but Mr. Kitching continued to live at the school, providing custodial service until his death.

Robert Kitching was born in Melrose, Massachusetts in 1883. With his six brothers and sisters, he attended the local schools there, before moving to a farm in Vermont's Northeast Kingdom to improve his failing health. As a young man, he regained his health through hard farm work, and he never forgot the physical and psychological benefits that such work had afforded him. His love of things natural was obvious to all who knew him, but his thorough knowledge of animal husbandry and agricultural principles was even more apparent to the many hundreds of boys who passed through his farm classes.

Although Mr. Kitching never married, he remained close to his family, which is now, excepting a ninety-three old sister, an extended network of nieces, nephews, and their many children. He maintained deep friendships with alumni and former instructors, frequently corresponding and visiting with old friends. He traveled often and far, and he harbored a lifelong love for all sports. His loyal support of the Seahawk teams, as well as the Red Sox, and the Dartmouth College football team is happily remembered. (He attended the 1972 Harvard-Dartmouth game by himself ten days before his death.)

As a final demonstration of his loyalty and affection, Robert Kitching bequeathed a very large part of his estate to the Academy. Indeed, Thompson Academy will remember him with appreciation, love, and respect and will try to do for other boys what he did for so many.

THOMPSON ACADEMY

Unusual Boys' School on Island in Boston Harbor Since 1833

Originally known as the Farm and Trades School, Thompson Academy was organized in Boston in 1814 and its first site was near the Paul Revere homestead. In 1833 the school moved to beautiful 157-acre Thompson's Island in Boston Harbor.

The Academy serves worthy boys of limited means, usually from broken homes. It is a private school, hence has no religious, political or state ties except those of mutual friendship. It accepts boys of all religious faiths and color.

Grades 7 through 12 are taught, with most of the boys preparing for college. There are, however, two terminal programs for those who do not want to go to college.

The enrollment is 100 students. About one-half come from Metropolitan Boston and the others from the other New England states. A few are from distant points.

Houghton D. Pearl is headmaster. The management of the Academy is vested in a Board of Trustees numbering 26, of whom six are alumni of the Academy.

An important feature of the Academy is the Work Program. Each student spends two hours every day at a work job. These tasks include dormitory janitor work, work on the grounds, dining room and kitchen jobs, and work in the shops, on the farm and on the boat.

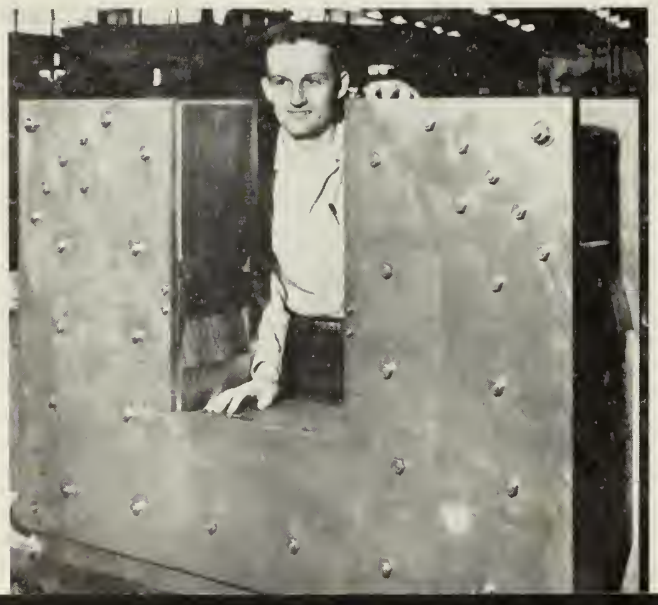
Liverpool in 1869 and this unique structure was devised.

one face up to strong competition on equal terms in a highly competitive world.

Dam Site. Glen Canyon Dam, Page, Arizona, largest concrete dam now being built in the United States, is located a few miles south of where the Colorado River crosses border of Arizona and Utah. Scheduled dedication date, March 6, 1964.

Fire's Frozen Frescoe. Bad at any time, fire is especially so in cold weather. For obvious reasons there are more property-destroying blazes during winter months than at any other time of the year. More reason to be extra careful now and to be sure your furnace is maintained for maximum efficiency and safety.

Big Magnet. Weighing 1,720 pounds, this is the world's largest permanent magnet. Built by Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corporation, it will pump liquid sodium for the breeder reactor at Argonne National Laboratory, Idaho Falls, Idaho.



Accident Happening. You'd expect it in a race. You wouldn't expect this driver to get up and walk away, but he did! Not so fortunate are the thousands involved in the average passenger automobile crashes. Bad weather driving demands top operating skill, perfect brakes, good tires, lights, etc., plus seat belts.

THOMPSON ACADEMY NEWSLETTER FALL 1974

The design for this Alumni Newsletter came from the Beacon, the Thompson's Island student newspaper first published in 1899. Printed by the students on their own printing press, it was preceded by the Emerald and the Olio, both of which were hand printed by students.

REFLECTIONS ON OUR HISTORY

R. Dumont

A school like Thompson Academy, which has served youth for 160 years, is rich in tradition and history. "Discovered" in 1621 by the Pilgrim, Myles Standish, it came into the hands of David Thompson in 1626. He built a home and trading post on the south end of the Island, both of which were the first buildings in Boston Harbor. In 1634 the General Court of Massachusetts Bay Colony granted Thompson's Island to the inhabitants of Dorchester on the condition that they pay a yearly rent of 12 pence to the treasurer. The money collected from Thompson's Island helped support the first free public school in America.

During the American Revolution the British seized Thompson's Island along with many of the other harbor islands. They were forced to depart when the American Continental Army set fire to the Island. In 1833, the trustees of the Boston Farm School bought the Island from its last private owner, George Beal, and sent Rev. E. M. Wells to the Island to start construction of building to be used by the Farm School. In 1835 the Farm School merged with the Boston Asylum for Indigent Boys and became known as the Boston Asylum and Farm School for Indigent Boys. In 1857, the first school band in America was formed on Thompson's Island. The band became quite renowned, receiving a citation from President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1957.

Cottage Row, a collection of student-built cottages, is purported to be one of the first student governments in schools in America. The students owned shares, elected officers, issued arrest warrants and tried cases in the various courts.

FARM SCHOOL, THOMPSON'S ISLAND, BOSTON.

REPORT FROM THE PLANNING OFFICE

The summer program just completed gave us a glimpse of what the future might hold in store for Thompson's Island. Thirty high school boys and girls — from Thompson Academy and from Dorchester and South Boston High Schools — formed the student body. Also participating were twenty college and graduate students and eight teachers — adult learners. Residential directors for the boys' and girls' dorms, resource people in outdoor education and problem-focussed curriculum, an education coordinator, and Project Director Frank White formed the core staff of the Planning Office.

The group was broken down into four teams which then spent three days doing team-building exercises — outdoor problems or "initiative tests" like those used in Outward Bound schools. Then each team spent five days gathering data about the plants, animals, water bodies, land forms, and soil types which are part of Thompson's environment, and data about the people and organizations in the Boston area with an interest in Thompson's future. The purpose was to assess the resources and the community needs that Thompson could satisfy with these resources. Based on this information, each team then spent two weeks inventing specific educational uses of the Island's environment.

One team focussed on learning from the sea. Some water sampling equipment was built; aquaria for storing marine life were set up; boat trips to obtain water samples for testing were taken; and an outline of a lab facility was prepared.

A second team focussed on learning from the past of Thompson's Island. A storage room with records dating back to 1835 was opened; documents were inspected, organized and excerpted. An old dump on the south end of the Island was dug into, and artifacts were identified, cleaned, and displayed. The Thomases were interviewed so that their recollections could be obtained.

A third team planned an environmental education program for elementary school children. The large marsh on the south end of the Island was studied; a number of stations were identified for illustrating particular animal, plant, and physical forms; and several groups of young children were brought to the Island to participate in a combined nature walk and scavenger hunt.

The fourth team designed an environmental pathway which could enable visitors to learn about the natural history of the entire Island while protecting its resources from overuse. A model of the Island was built showing the proposed pathway in full detail; rest stops, interpretive signs, and a trail headquarters were also designed.

All teams made use of field trips to see how others had solved problems similar to their own. Each prepared an outdoor field activity and a formal presentation for a conference held during the last week of the program. Each prepared photographic and written records of their work.

The conference brought eighty people to Thompson's Island — educators, environmentalists, youth workers, community leaders, and government officials — to meet with summer program participants, hear presentations, and discuss alternatives for Thompson's future. The conference showed a great deal of interest within the community in supporting Thompson's efforts to change. The summer program was well received, and sparked lively discussions of ideas for curriculum, program, people to contact, sources of funds — and problems to address.

The summer program has provided the Trustees and Planning Office with experience in some of the major aspects of the future Thompson programs, such as: coeducation; learning directly from the environment; using teams to tackle problems; mixing Thompson students with public school students; combining the education of young people with the training of adults; making greater use of mainland community resources; and learning through teaching and community service.

All of these were shown to have a viable role in Thompson's future. And of course, the summer experiment showed many areas where further work is necessary. Work for the year includes running more pilot programs and pulling together all the strings to make a workable plan for the future.

City Hall, Cottage Row

SPECIAL NEEDS

The school would appreciate gifts of any recreational items such as Ping-pong or pool tables, pin-ball machines, juke boxes or televisions. A camera club is being formed and we would also be grateful for donations of any cameras that may be gathering dust in closets or attics. Also camping equipment would be appreciated to support a fledgling outing club.

ALUMNI NOTES

One of the highlights of the summer was the island wedding of Charles Thomas '70. The ceremony was held on the front lawn under the trees and was followed by a reception also held outside. Chuck's best man was Archie Lee, of the Class of 1970. There were many alumni and staff members among the two hundred who attended.

John Mitchell '61 and his family are living in Haverhill, N.H. where he is teaching industrial arts, science and mathematics at Haverhill Academy.

Pedro Ramos '65 and his family are residing in Minneapolis, Minnesota. While working on his master's thesis in sociology, he is personnel director for the Knutson Companies. He is a graduate of Central Missouri State University.

Weston "Ozzie" Page '38 and Harriet celebrated their 25th anniversary in Florida last spring. Three of their sons are in college: two at the University of New Hampshire, and one at Northeastern. For the past 27 years, Ozzie has been teaching at the junior high school in Claremont, New Hampshire.
